

WHISKY

where whisky is produced can make a big difference to how it tastes and smells, scotland has 6 whisky regions all with different characteristics; work out what one tickles yer fancy and we can recommend a whisky from that region for you.

speyside - home to more than half of scotland's distilleries and often full of fruity, nutty flavours, and tend to be less peaty in character than other regions.

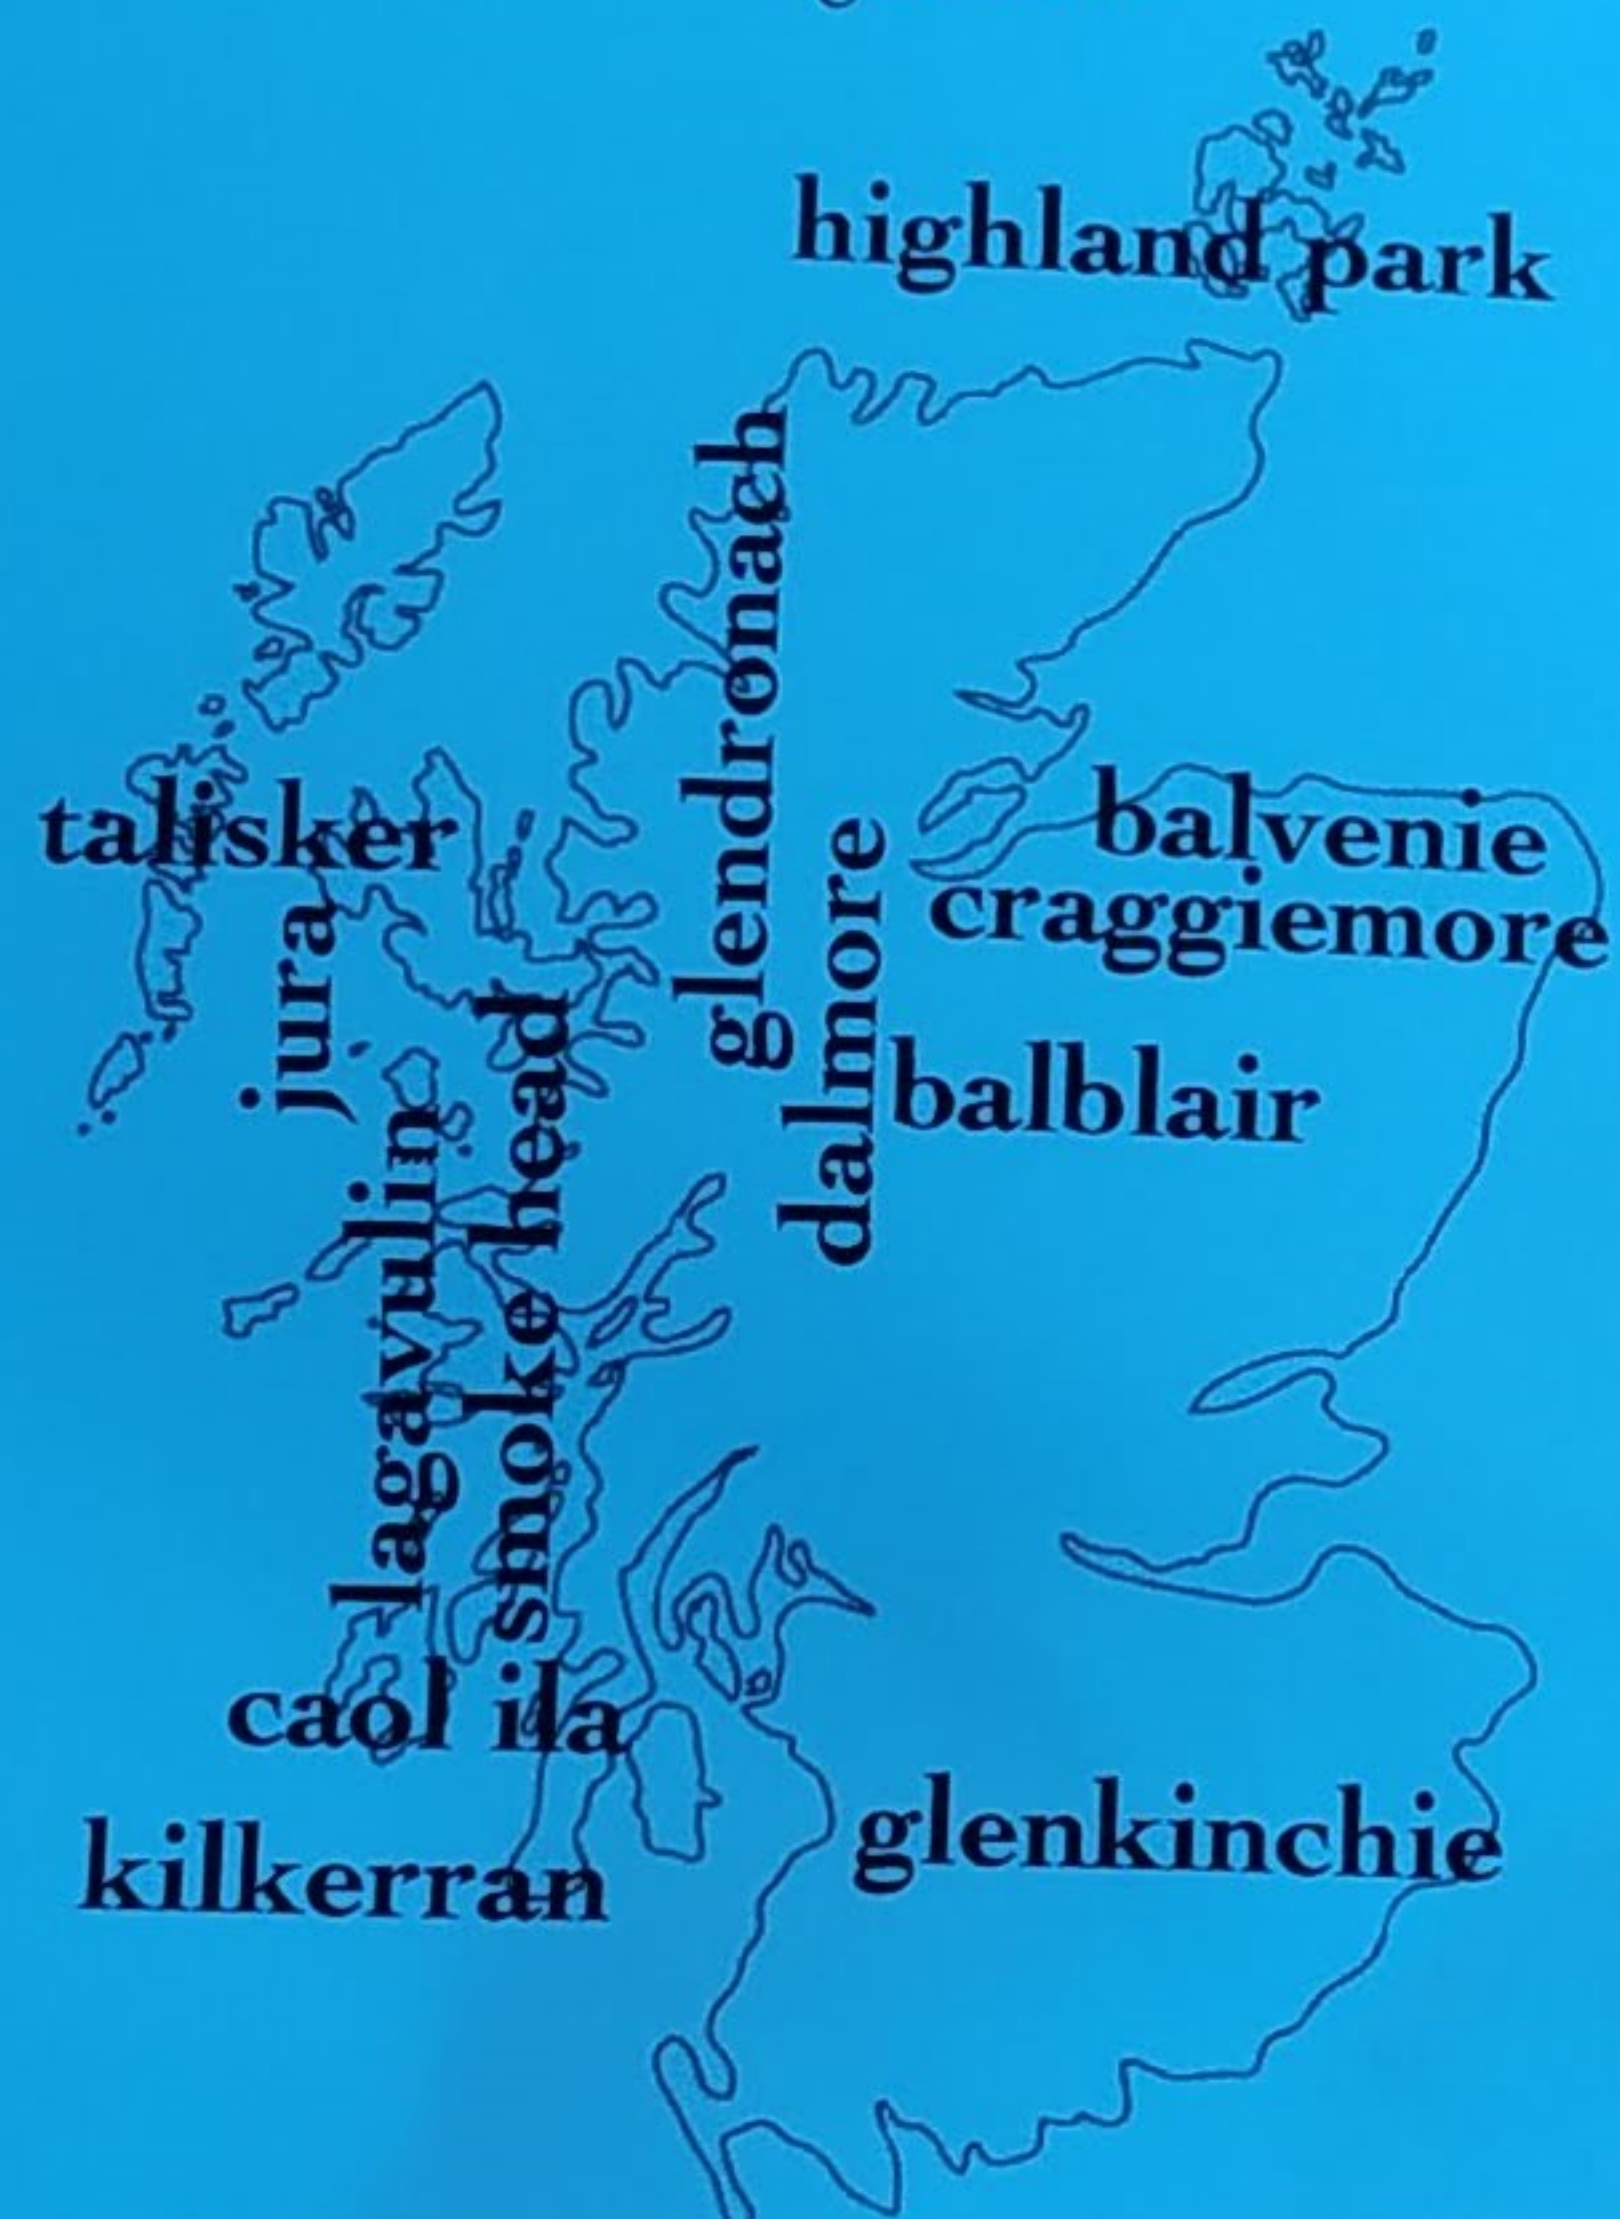

highland - a huge region where you can expect subtle, oaky drams that express the dramatic coast and moorland, while still leaving room for rich fruitiness, honey and occasionally a little bit of peat and smoke.

lowland - are famous for gentle, triple-distilled malts and lighter notes of grass, ginger, cinnamon and toffee with the occasional citrus edge.

SCOTTISH GINS

our gin range comprises a number of gins from every corner of scotland.

we also have a number of different tonics available as well as garnishes - one of the team will be able to help you with a recommendation if you are unsure / overwhelmed by the whole gin-trification thing going on right now!

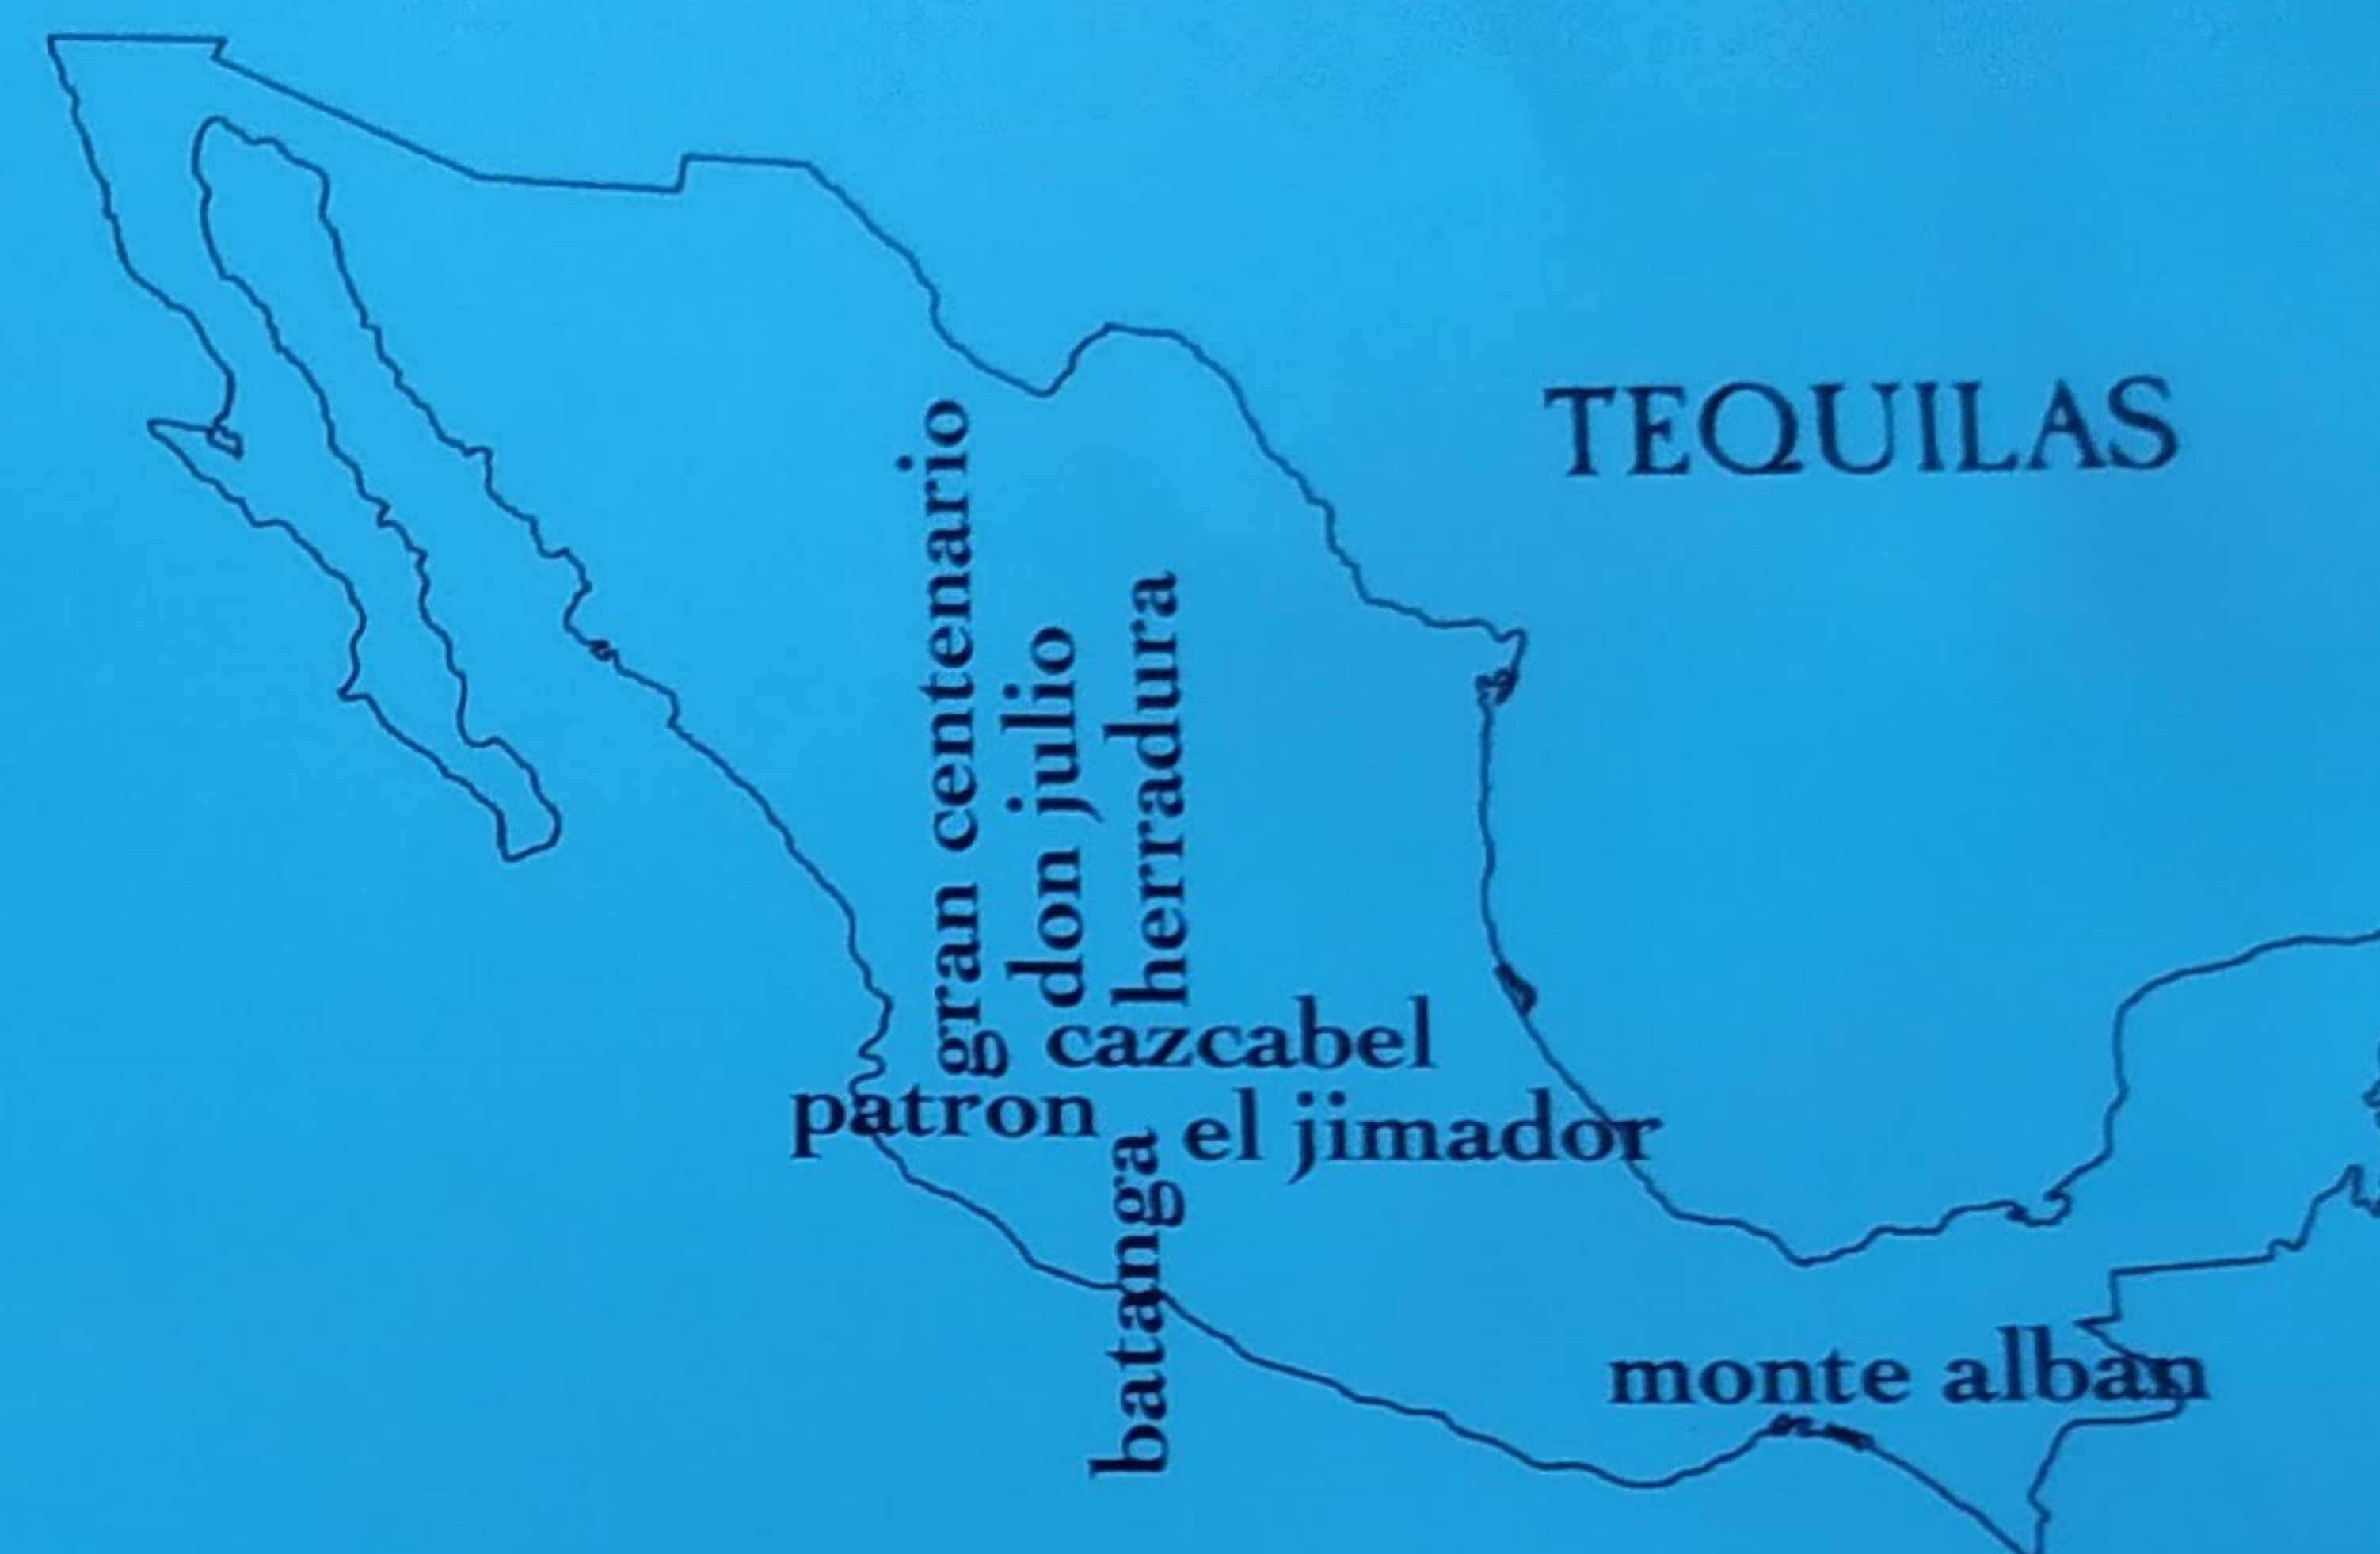

islay - the southernmost and most exposed of scotland's inner hebrides, is home to medicinally smoky whiskies that go heavy on the peat flavours.

islands - most of these whiskies are tinged by the salinity of the sea, but beyond that, their flavour profiles vary wildly from island to island.

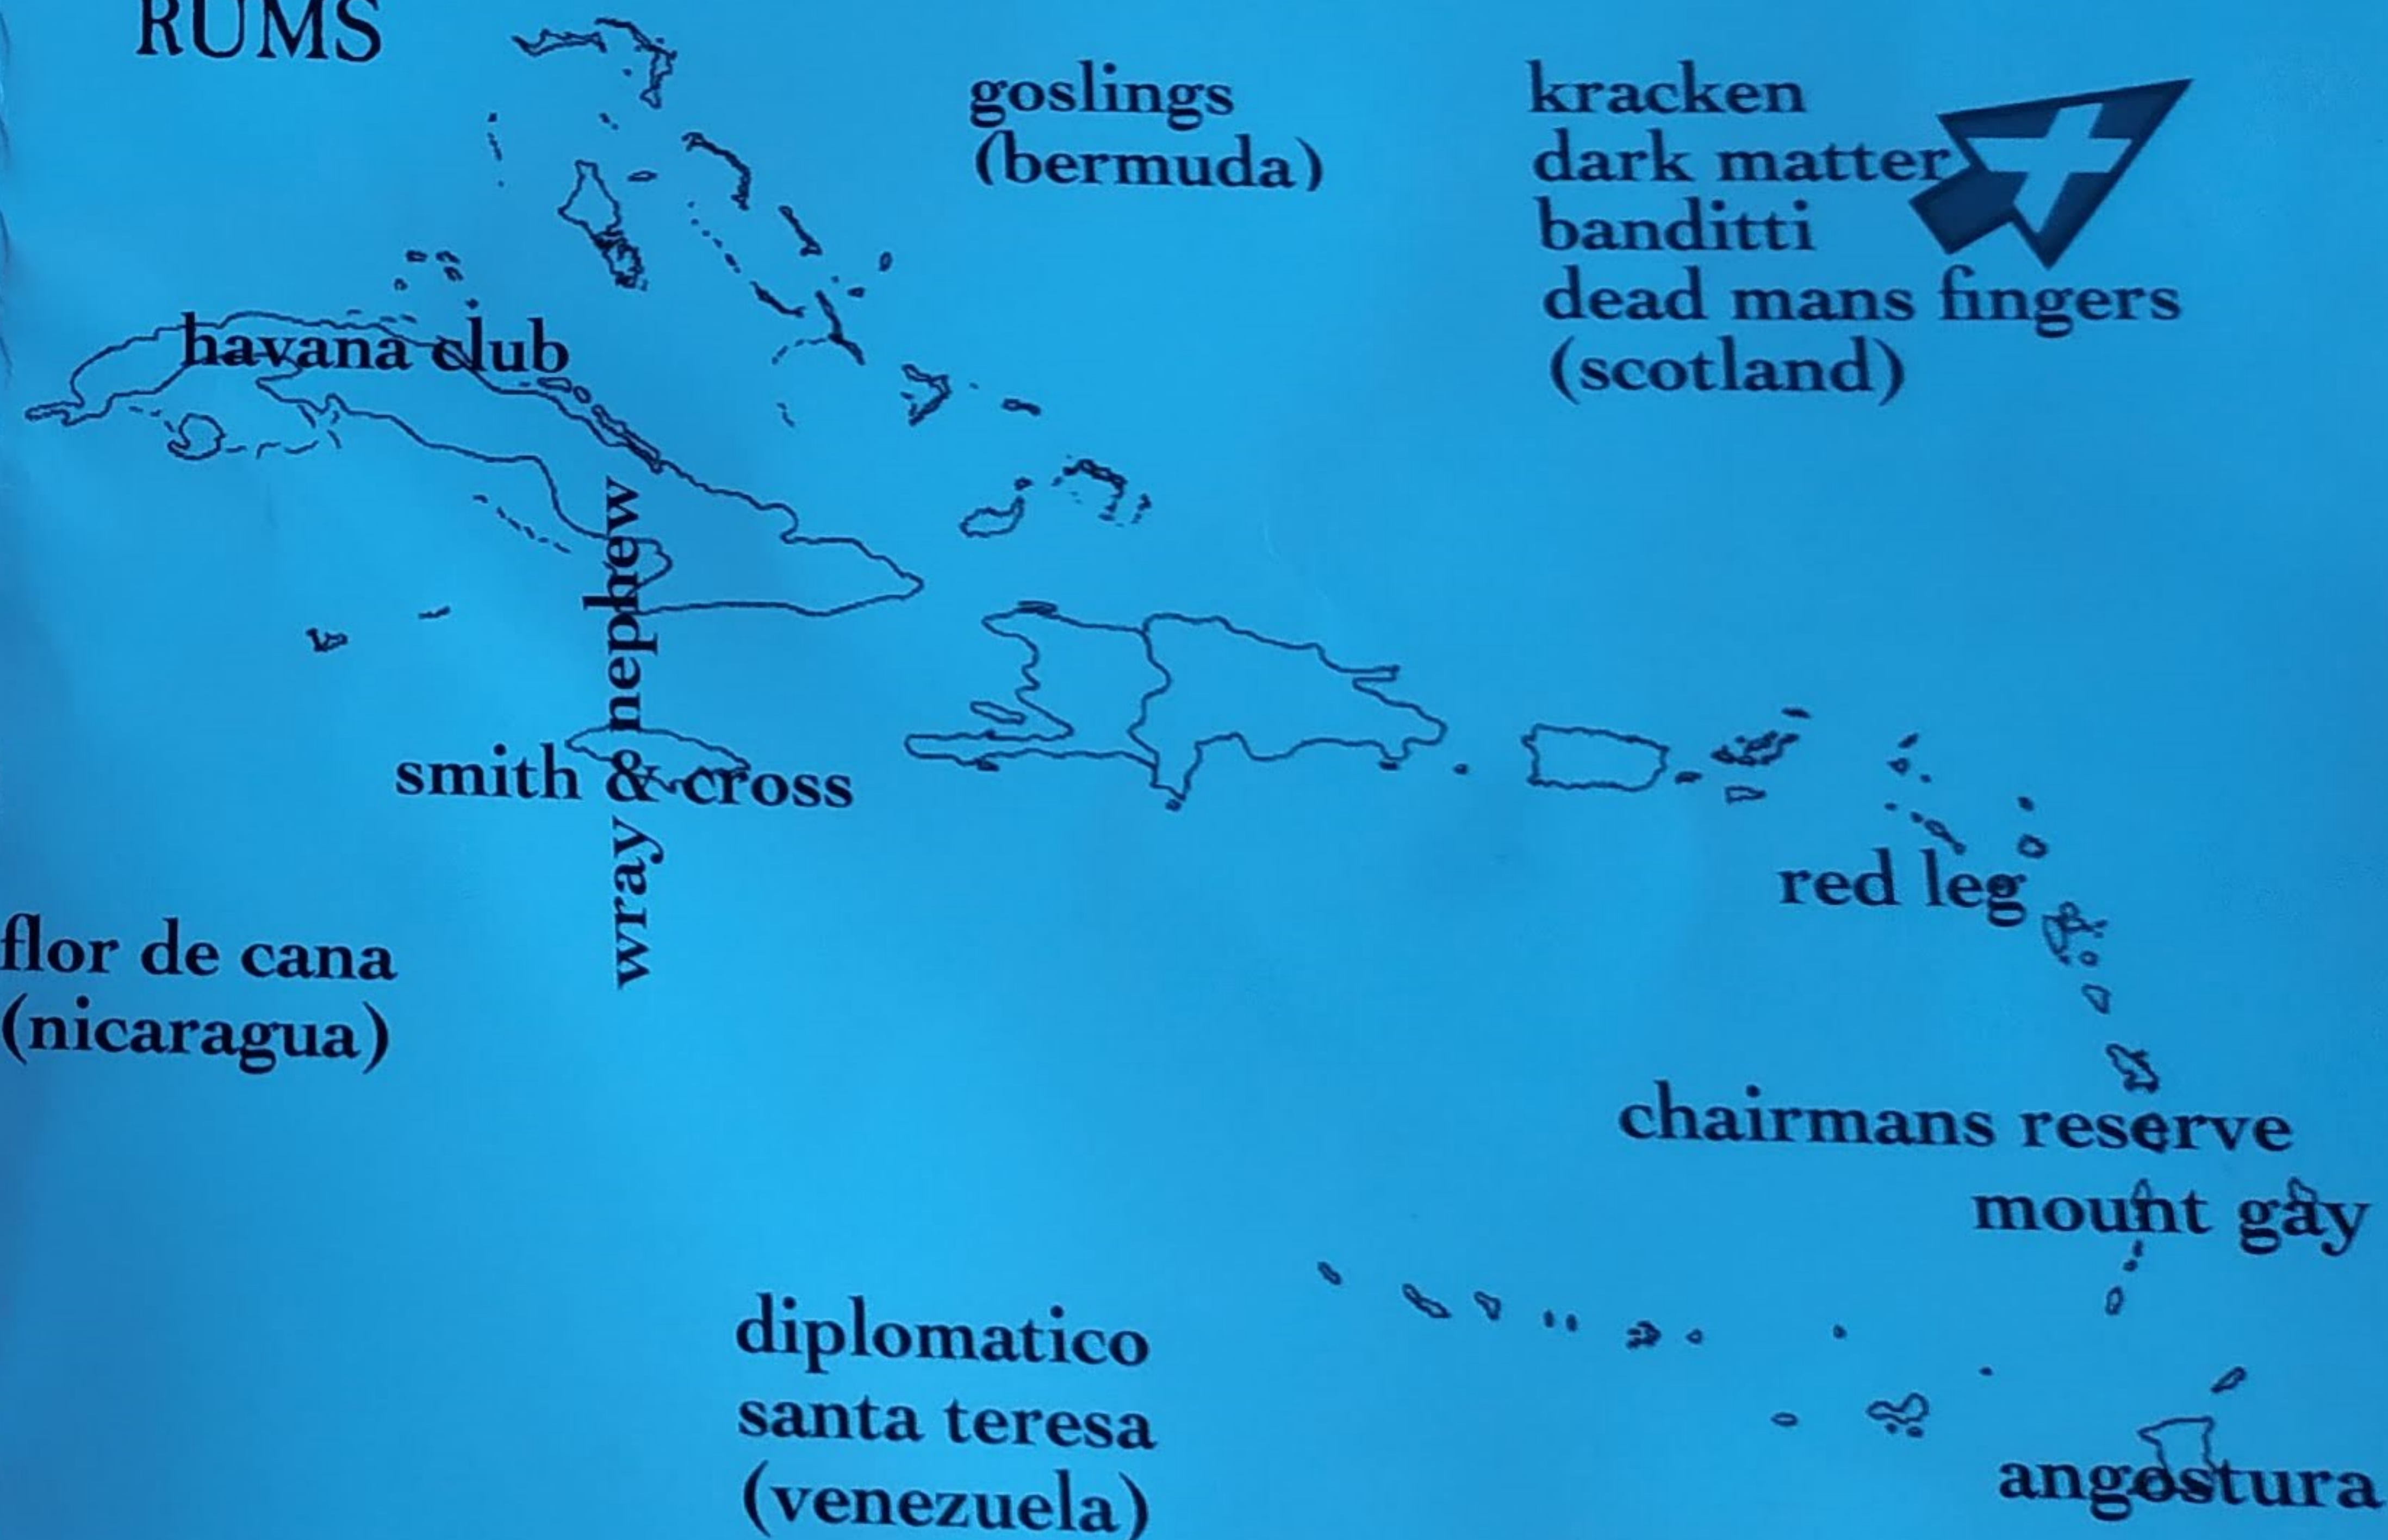

campeltown - very few distilleries but its malts are pretty unique, giving off salt, sweetness, smoke and flavours of vanilla and fruit all at once.
